

Responding to Cyberbullying: Guidelines for Administrators

No Bully, Common Sense Media, and the California-based law firm Fagen Friedman & Fulfrost believe that promoting social and emotional learning, creating a school climate where respect for diversity and skills is valued, and educating students, families, and faculty about how to behave ethically online are the best ways to prevent cyberbullying. However, we recognize that incidents may still occur. The chart below can help you respond to these incidents, although it does not constitute legal advice.

Visit www.commonsense.org/educators for cyberbullying prevention resources and classroom lessons on digital citizenship. Go to No Bully (www.nobully.com) to learn about Solution Team®, a non-punitive approach to addressing bullying. Contact Fagen Friedman & Fulfrost (fagenfriedman.com) for legal advice.
